It just Dawned On me

Posted by lexxy2000 - 2009/10/28 03:39

After messing with JMS all last night i decided to come here to the site to ask for and notice in order to get to sites to share articles and still be individuals you have to buy article sharing and the same for menus. (crap) why is that no included in jms as one package component maybe i should have read the whole site first then i would have realized that. Now i am stuck again till i get some more money to get those to.

Just wondering why they are separate from the main component?

==========

Re:It just Dawned On me

Posted by edwin2win - 2009/10/28 09:48

The reason is very simple.
They are totally independent extensions.
For the "article sharing for JMS" component that is a layer over the standard joomla articles (content) component.
It just get the DB connection from JMS and in reallity this is a standard com_content compnent that is converted on the fly into a multisites version.

They are separated like all the joomla components, modules and plugins.
We have not tried to create a "super package" able to install several components with modules and plugins in one shot. We have use the standard joomla installation procedure that consists in using 1 install for 1 extension and not 1 install for several extensions.

All the extension are independent.
They just use the multisites DB connection defined in JMS instead of the standard joomla "mono" DB connection.
This is the only reason why they require JMS. They just need the multisites DB connection.

==========