Updates to Articles not showing in Slave sites
Posted by jstvnson - 2010/02/26 18:32

I have 34 slave sites running off of one master site. They are not duplicate sites because the slave sites will have certain articles and switches that are independent.

When an article is updated on the Master site...shouldn't it be updated on the slave site?

To view certain articles, users click on buttons in side modules...which means that the Article Sharing for Multisite would not work for this issue. (I already have all JMS2Win extensions)

Please help.

John

John,
are you using the "Article Sharing for JMS".
This is a COMPONENT (not a module or whatever else) that allow display any articles coming from any websites defined in JMS.
So if you have created a menu item that request to display all the articles coming from a section or a category of another website, they will be displayed.

This is a function I would like to have control over.

I'm planing the editing privileges and would like to offer clients independent editor privileges for articles that are auto shared across several sites i.e. in a blog category layout.

However, I would like to have a final veto of these articles and updates before they are published. Does anyone know a simple solution for this ?

The "Article Sharing for JMS" does NOT allow to submit or write article in another websites.
So if you want to submit articles you have to use the standard joomla submission and redirect the user to the website where it will be physically stored.

That's fine but I would like to be able to approve articles before they are published across multiple sites - similar to a moderator

You can use the standard joomla user group to do that.
Joomla propose author, editor and publisher group.
So you perhaps need to use such "profiles"
