Terminology is a bit confusing

Posted by leolll - 2010/03/19 04:38

Hello,

Your component looks very interesting. One thing that is making it much harder to understand is the use of the word "template". It is used in two completely different senses side-by-side.

Perhaps a JMS template could be renamed to a "blueprint" or "snapshot" and reserve the word template to mean a Joomla template?

http://content.screencast.com/users/leo_lll/folders/Jing/media/6e1ebaea-0f4b-4fdd-a55c-03f9022c2893/2010-03-18_2032.png

For beginners the change in terms can be difficult.

Anyway, thanks for the great work on this product.

==========

Re: Terminology is a bit confusing

Posted by edwin2win - 2010/03/19 09:40

The word template is the only one that exactly mean that you are using a reference to something that is used to provide the layout, structure, (in sumarry the template of a new website). This is the "replication, sharing, new, ... rules" to create the new website.

We generally using "JMS templates" or "Website template" to quality this word.
When we refer to the "Joomla template" we generally quality it with "joomla" or give the synonym "themes".

==========