I don't think so.
The alternate solution that I have already explained consists in modifying or creating a specify layout that does not use the "save" button in the tool bar but a normal submit button in the form. In this case the SEF is working correctly and this is not the joomla java script that simulate the submit button.
This solution were already used by another customer with success.

As told before, the javascript submit does not work for unknow reason when sef is enable.
The post parameters are not received by the PHP and all the form fields are empty.

When using submit input button inside a form, it works.
So you can add lines like

Inside de instead of using the javascript outside the form.
This should solve the issue

Thank you very much for your help Edwin.

Well, I´ve got another question. When I create a slave site in back end, the configuration.php file is created with chmod 644 but when I create slave site in front end, it created the configuration.php file with chmod 444. I need that configuration.php with chmod 644 when i create a slave site in front end.

Thank you!!!!
